Exhibit Opening ~ From Home to Headquarters: Washington in Worcester
We know that Washington slept here, but what else did he do? Join us for the grand opening of our new exhibit – From Home to Headquarters: Washington in Worcester – to find out! View the recreation of Washington's Aide-de-Camp office and learn about the Peter Wentz Farmstead's connection to the Battle of Germantown. Hear stories about the other visitors Washington brought with him – from his 50-man Life Guard, to his household staff of both hired and enslaved workers, and his aides-de-camp: including Alexander Hamilton, John Laurens, and Tench Tilghman.
All ages; free.

Sunday, October 2 from 10:00 am to 3:00 pm
Bloodhounds: A Look at the British Light Infantry
George Washington was headquartered at the Peter Wentz house in order to stage an attack on the British at Germantown. Although the Americans initially had the advantage at the Battle of Germantown, the disciplined British troops rallied and put the Continental army into retreat. One of the challenges Washington's men faced in battle were the British light infantry, who were known as bloodhounds for the way that they relentlessly pursued the patriot forces. Join the recreated His Majesty's 40th foot, light infantry company as they demonstrate the tactics that these crack troops employed against the Washington's soldiers. Demonstrations will take place at 11:00 am, 1:00 pm, and 3:00 pm.

All ages, free. No registration required.

Saturday, October 8 at 7:30 pm
They Passed This Way Campfire Program
Did you know that George Washington and the Continental army traveled along the same routes in Montgomery County that we often drive on today? Come to this campfire program to hear about the places that Washington and his men visited including the Peter Wentz house and Methacton Hill. Join Ranger Marc and gather around the campfire to hear first-person accounts from soldiers and civilians who lived and witnessed this fascinating time in our shared past.
Follow the lanterns from the parking lot to the campfire. In case of bad weather, the program will be cancelled.
All ages; free.

Saturday, October 15 at 11:00 am, 1:00 pm, or 3:00 pm
For the Trouble of the House

How do we know George Washington stayed at the Peter Wentz house? As it turns out Washington kept a detailed expense account that lists both room and board that he paid to those who provided it for him and his staff. For example, for the dates that Washington stayed with the Wentz's, there are receipts that show that the general paid Peter's son Mathias Wentz for milk, butter, cabbages and other food items. Records also show that the general paid Mathias for rent, in entries recorded as "for the trouble of the house." Come and learn about Washington's stay with the Wentz's as we delve into these accounts that make history spring to life.
All ages; free. Limited space; registration required. Meet at the visitor center at the scheduled times.

Saturday, November 5 from 10:00 am to 3:30 pm
Homesteading 101: Cider Pressing
